Speech Sounds: Phonemes & Graphemes

Words in every language are made up of speech sounds, usually referred to as phonemes or phones. In the English language, these sounds are made up of individual letters or combinations of letters (graphemes) and are listed below, with example words showing how the combination might be used in certain words. You may discover a few other combinations not included here, but most common ones have been considered. (numbers are only for reference.)

44) s, ge	trea(s)ure, bei(ge)
45) u, ew, eau	amb(u)lance, f(ew), b(eau)ty
46) x	e(x)ample (where “ex...” sounds like “egz...”)

Some words can be pronounced with regional variations in both the UK and USA. For example, the “ge” combination of letters in the word “beige” can be pronounced in a way that sounds like “j” (as in jump), or “zh” (as in measure). Some will pronounce the word exit as “egzit”, others as “eksit”.

It is generally accepted that the vowel sounds a, e, i, o and u, are made from the combinations ae, ee, ie, oe and ue, with a letter in between, such as:

gae, fine, these, bone and tune

For the purposes of this book we have listed the letter combinations and sounds these combinations of letters make when placed next to each other, which should help you more easily recognise the possible sounds these combinations make when reading, taking into account the context in which each word is used.

This list shows the main letter combinations making up all of the recognized speech sounds from which you can make up every word in the English language.

You will notice that the same letter, or combination of letters, can be pronounced differently, depending on the word. For example, consider how the letter ‘o’ is pronounced differently in the words, ‘hop’, ‘love’, ‘prove’ and ‘nose’.

Commonly Confused Spellings

Homophone Horrors!

The most common spelling mistakes are often those words that sound the same when spoken, but are spelled differently and have a different meaning entirely. These are known as homophones, and of all the different homophones you will come across, the most common spelling mistakes centre on the following common words:

to, too and two and there, their and they're

If ever there were words designed to drive your teacher mad, these are the ones! If you can master the correct use of each word, you will make your teacher very happy!

~~Hear~~ Here are some examples of these words in use:
oops!

I am going to the fair.

I am going to the fair too.

The two boys went to the fair too.

- In the first sentence, “to” is followed by more words to show where the person is going. It can therefore be thought of as a motion or destination word. Consider also thirty miles to go.
- In the second sentence, “too” means....as well...or...also.
- In the last sentence, “two” means....2 (the number 2).

I live over there.

There is another house down the hill.

The Smith family are nice. That's their house over there.

Their house is over there and they're at home!

- In the first sentence, “there” is used to suggest a place or position.
- In the second sentence, “there” is used to suggest the existence of something.
- In the third sentence, “their” means belonging to or associated with the people (in this case the Smith family) previously mentioned.
- In the fourth sentence, “they're” is known as a contraction. It means they are, with the apostrophe replacing the letter a in are and shortening the two words to a single word (they're). An apostrophe is often used like this when you are writing something informal that someone is saying or has said in speech.

When reading and writing, if you are not sure how a word should be pronounced, or spelled, it may help you to look at or think about the words that come before and after (the context in which it is used).

More Common Homophones

Look at these common homophones and write a short phrase for each one showing how they might be used:

Investigating Homographs & Heteronyms

Homographs are words that are spelled the same but have different meanings (e.g. lie down...tell a lie). Heteronyms are a type of homograph that are also spelled the same, but sound different (e.g. a bow tie... the bow of a ship). Look at the list of words and determine which words are homographs and which words are heteronyms (based on the context phrase), and write more examples of your own.

I am too tired to play.

Word Ladders - Fun With Words

Look at the word at the top of the ladder, and by adding, removing or replacing one letter at a time, try and reach the bottom of the ladder, without repeating a word. We have started the first ladder for you, and on the next page there are some blank ladders for you to use with new starting words your teacher will give you.

Letter Strings & Words Within Words

Find as many other words within the words listed here, from consecutive letter strings. We have given you an example and some more words to work with, but think of more examples like your school name, your surname and anything else to challenge yourself.

Contractions

The following phrases can be shortened with the use of an apostrophe to make a new single word that means the same. The apostrophe replaces a letter or letters to make the shorter (contracted) word. Can you work out which letter or letters the apostrophe would replace to make the new word? Say the phrase out loud to give yourself clues, then write an example showing how the contracted word might be used. There is space for a few more examples your teacher may give you to work with.
